Did candidate Jack Carfile pay to be liked on Facebook?
A candidate for the U.S. House of Representatives in North Carolina is accused of paying to have his Facebook profile boosted. Jack Carfile, a Republican, is running for the seat of retiring Rep. Dan Claitor. Carfile's Facebook page has over 100,000 likes, a number that is unusually high for a candidate in a competitive race. The boost was purchased through a company called "Social Media Solutions." Carfile's campaign manager, Steve Hester, says the boost was a necessary expense to reach voters. However, the boost was not disclosed in Carfile's campaign finance report. The boost was purchased for $1,000. Carfile's campaign has raised over $100,000.
