County approves new upgrades at fairgrounds
by ROBERT PRICE
• Leader & Times
Seward County commissioners gave the go ahead for two upgrades to the county fairgrounds on Monday.
The first was a new public address system for the rodeo arena. Fairground worker Greg Rice told the board that the current system in the rodeo arena and the pit area of the race track that would provide speaker coverage for more than 50 percent of the area.
"When ... they're announcing at the rodeo, they can't hear it over the crowd. And in a lot of them, it would cover the pit area, but not down to the cut away, west and county entrance," Rice said.
Rice said there are currently 12 speakers in the PA system, with only a few still working properly. He said he would be responsible for the installation of the unit.
One bid was received for the project, although Rice said he had talked to "a lot of people" and that multi were sent to several companies, including some local ones. The lone bid came in from Full Compass Systems of Madison, Wis., for a cost of $11,000 for the unit.
Commissioner Jim Hess said although the price was somewhat high, he believed the purchase was a necessity.
"I think this is a lot of money, but they do a good job of doing some good things out there to update our facility," he said. "I think this is a good idea. I think we need to do it."
The commission unanimously approved the item, with money to come from the county's general fund.
The other upgrade was for the purchase of an LED sign at the fairgrounds. Greg Rice said
