A Nielsen survey says Liberal is third in the nation for eatery growth potential

By KYLE CLAYTON

Liberal, Mo., is one of the nation's most promising markets for new restaurants, according to a Nielsen survey. The city ranked third in the nation for eatery growth potential, behind only Chicago and New York City.

The Nielsen survey, which is based on data from 100,000 households, found that Liberal has a high concentration of young adults, a high percentage of the population who are employed, and a high percentage of the population who are married. These factors are all indicators of a strong market for new restaurants.

The Nielsen survey also found that Liberal has a high percentage of the population who are interested in dining out. This is another indicator of a strong market for new restaurants.

The Nielsen survey is the most comprehensive survey of its kind. It provides a detailed look at the dining habits of millions of households across the United States. The survey is used by many major corporations to make decisions about where to open new stores.

State explains Lexis Law concerning day care regulations

The regulation also requires day care centers to have a minimum of two staff members per child. This is a change from the previous regulation, which required only one staff member per child.

The DHSS has issued this regulation in response to concerns about the safety of day care centers. The DHSS has found that many day care centers are not meeting the minimum staffing requirements.
