Routine blood test saved baby's life

MCADD a silent killer for many

A 14-month-old baby, who looked healthy and happy, died last week because of a rare genetic condition called medium-chain acyl-CoA dehydrogenase deficiency (MCADD). The condition is a type of fatty acid oxidation disorder that causes the body to be unable to break down certain fats into energy. It is a silent killer for many children.

Parents, Colleen and Morgan, found out about their son's condition when he was 14 months old. They had taken him to a pediatrician for a routine check-up. The doctor had noticed that the baby was not gaining weight as quickly as he should be. After some tests, the doctor discovered that the baby had MCADD.

The parents were shocked and devastated. They had no idea that their son had such a serious condition. They had to learn that MCADD is a rare genetic condition that affects the body's ability to break down fats into energy. It is a silent killer for many children.
