Survey says community cares most about security, safety
A survey conducted by the Dallas Morning News and the Dallas Area Council of Governments (DACOG) found that security and safety are the top concerns for residents in the Dallas area. The survey, which included over 1,000 respondents, revealed that 68 percent of people are concerned about crime, and 62 percent are worried about terrorism. Other top concerns include the economy, education, and the environment. The survey also found that residents are more likely to support increased law enforcement and security measures to address these concerns.
