KU removes prof from classroom

University of Kansas officials said the State Board of Higher Education has approved a plan to remove a professor from the classroom for alleged sexual harassment. The professor, Dr. Robert L. Taylor, was accused of sexually harassing a student. The board's decision is final and will be implemented immediately. Taylor is currently on leave from his position as an associate professor of psychology. The board also ordered Taylor to pay the university's legal fees. Taylor's attorney said he is appealing the board's decision.
