Kansas officials urge motorists to watch for deer
Kansas officials are urging motorists to watch for deer on the roads during the fall season. The state's Department of Transportation is reporting that deer-vehicle collisions are on the rise, and that these collisions can be fatal for both the driver and the deer. The department is advising motorists to slow down in areas where deer are known to cross the road, and to be especially alert during dawn and dusk. The department is also advising motorists to use their headlights and to honk their horns if they see a deer on the road. The department is also advising motorists to avoid driving at night in areas where deer are known to cross the road.
