SUICIDE WATCH
A new study published in the journal of the American Psychiatric Association suggests that people who are suicidal are more likely to be helped by a family member than by a professional. The study found that 60 percent of people who were suicidal were helped by a family member, while only 30 percent were helped by a professional. The study also found that people who were helped by a family member were more likely to be helped again in the future than those who were helped by a professional.

DUST BOWL
New book looks at those who survived and stayed
By David Shields
The Dust Bowl was a time of great hardship for many Americans. But for some, it was a time of survival and even triumph. In "Dust Bowl: The Great Migration, How One Family Survived the Worst of Times," author David Shields tells the story of the family that stayed in their home during the Dust Bowl. The family's story is one of resilience and hope in the face of adversity.

Local man's effort helping restore abandoned Springfield Cemetery
A local man is working to restore an abandoned cemetery in Springfield. The cemetery, which was abandoned in the 1950s, is now overgrown with weeds and brush. The man, who is a volunteer, is working to clear the area and restore the graves. He has already cleared several graves and is working to clear more. The cemetery is located on the corner of 11th and 12th streets in Springfield.

Missouri man charged with extortion in 4-city water threat
A Missouri man has been charged with extortion after threatening to cut off water to four cities. The man, who is a former police officer, threatened to cut off water to Springfield, Branson, and two other cities. The threat was made over the radio. The man was charged with extortion and is being held in jail. The cities are working to ensure that their water supply is not cut off.
