Fan injured by hot dog suing Kan. City Royals

Man says he was injured at a September 2009 Royals game when the team's lion mascot, Slugger, threw a t-source, foil-wrapped wiener into the stands that struck his eye

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — If it had been a foul ball or broken bat that struck Jackie Stiles in the eye during a September Royals game, the county likely wouldn't have the team to pay for her migraines and suffering.

But Stiles was struck by a hot dog thrown by the team's mascot — behind the back, no less — by just one have a case.

The Missouri Supreme Court is weighing whether the Royals and other sports teams should be responsible for being sued over the injuries caused by events on the field, court or rink — should also apply to injuries caused by teams on the field, court or rink — should also apply to injuries caused by teams on the field, court or rink — should also apply to injuries caused by teams
