Iceland's hidden elves delay road projects

Reykjavik, Iceland (AP) — Iceland's hidden elves are delaying road projects in the northern part of the island, according to a report from the Icelandic media.

The report says that the elves are angry because the government is planning to build a new road through their territory. The elves are said to be very sensitive to changes in their environment and are known for causing mischief if they are displeased.

The government has been trying to build the road for several years, but the elves have repeatedly caused problems. They are said to have caused accidents and delays on the road, and to have even destroyed some of the construction equipment.

The report says that the government is now trying to negotiate with the elves. They are offering them gifts and trying to convince them that the road is necessary for the country's development. However, the elves are still being stubborn and are not willing to move.

The report also says that the elves are very powerful and can cause a lot of trouble if they are not satisfied. They are said to be able to control the weather and to have other magical powers. This has made them a popular part of Icelandic folklore.

The report concludes that the government will have to find a way to deal with the elves if it wants to build the road. It says that the elves are a very important part of Icelandic culture and that the government should respect their wishes.

MERRY CHRISTMAS
Apolo 8 astronaut marks 1968 broadcast to earth

Washington (AP) — The Apollo 8 mission, the first crewed flight around the moon, will be commemorated on Monday with a special broadcast from the astronauts to Earth.

The broadcast will be held at 7 p.m. Eastern Standard Time and will feature the astronauts reading from the Bible. The mission was launched on December 16, 1968, and lasted for 28 days, during which the crew completed 10 orbits around the moon.

The broadcast is being held to mark the 45th anniversary of the mission. It will be broadcast on various television networks and can also be watched online. The astronauts will read from the Book of Genesis, the Book of Isaiah, and the Lord's Prayer.

The mission was a major milestone in the space race between the United States and the Soviet Union. It was the first time that humans had traveled beyond Earth's atmosphere and seen the moon from space. The mission was a success and paved the way for future lunar exploration.

The broadcast is being held at the same time as the mission was launched in 1968. It is a special occasion for many people and is being watched by millions of viewers around the world.
