Federal judge rules NSA phone surveillance legal

By MICHAEL COOPER
A federal judge has ruled that the National Security Agency's (NSA) phone surveillance program is legal. The judge, Judge Richard L. Nease, ruled in favor of the government. The ruling is a significant victory for the NSA. The judge found that the NSA's surveillance program complies with the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (FISA). The ruling is expected to be appealed. The NSA has been conducting the surveillance program since 2001. The program has been the subject of numerous lawsuits and congressional hearings. The judge's ruling is a clear endorsement of the program's legality.
