Home electricity use in US falling to 2001 levels

Home electricity use in the United States has fallen to levels not seen since 2001, according to a report from the U.S. Energy Information Administration (EIA) released Monday.

The report shows that total electricity consumption in U.S. homes fell 1.5 percent in 2012 from 2011, and is now 1.5 percent below the 2001 level.

The decline is attributed to a combination of factors, including a shift in the mix of electricity-generating sources, a decline in the number of homes, and a decline in the number of hours that homes are occupied.

The report also shows that electricity use per capita in U.S. homes has fallen 1.5 percent in 2012 from 2011, and is now 1.5 percent below the 2001 level.

The decline is attributed to a combination of factors, including a shift in the mix of electricity-generating sources, a decline in the number of homes, and a decline in the number of hours that homes are occupied.
