Justice delays health law's birth control mandate

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court has twice delayed the implementation of the birth control mandate of the Affordable Care Act, a decision that has frustrated many in the health care industry and among Democrats in Congress.

The court's decision, announced on Monday, means that the mandate, which requires employers to provide health insurance that covers birth control, will not take effect until at least the end of the year. The court's decision is a temporary reprieve, as the case will be heard again in June.

The mandate is part of the Affordable Care Act, which was signed into law by President Obama in September 2010. The mandate requires employers with 50 or more employees to provide health insurance that covers birth control. The mandate is one of the most controversial provisions of the law.

The lawsuit, filed on Monday, challenges the Supreme Court's decision to allow states to opt out of the individual mandate, a key provision of the law. The states argue that the Supreme Court's decision is an unconstitutional expansion of federal power.
