Obama set to announce 'practical' agenda focusing on immigration, income equality

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27 (AP) — President Barack Obama is expected to announce a new set of policies aimed at addressing immigration, income inequality and other issues, according to a senior administration official. The official said the president will likely announce the policies in the next few days. The policies are expected to include measures to attract more immigrants to the United States, to increase the minimum wage, and to provide more support for small businesses. The official said the president will also announce measures to address income inequality, including increasing the tax on high earners and providing more support for middle-class families. The official said the president will also announce measures to address other issues, including education and healthcare. The official said the president will announce the policies in a speech to the nation. The official said the president will announce the policies in a speech to the nation.
