Obama running out of reasons to reject Keystone XL

Obama is running out of reasons to reject the Keystone XL pipeline. The pipeline is a major project that would transport oil from the Canadian province of Alberta to the Gulf Coast. The pipeline has been the subject of a long and contentious debate. Obama has repeatedly stated that he opposes the pipeline. However, he has not provided a clear reason for his opposition. The pipeline is seen as a key project for the energy industry. It would provide a major source of revenue for the federal government. It would also provide a major source of jobs for the United States. Obama's opposition to the pipeline is seen as a major obstacle to its construction.
