Woody Allen's allies cast doubt on sexual abuse claims

By Michael Ochs

NEW YORK (AP) — Woody Allen's allies on Monday cast doubt on the sexual abuse claims of a woman who says she was sexually abused by the filmmaker in the 1970s.

The woman, who is now 40, says she was sexually abused by Allen when she was 17 and he was 44. She says the abuse lasted for several years and that she was pregnant with his child.

Allen's allies, including his lawyer and several friends, said they were shocked by the woman's claims and that they had never heard of her before. They said they had never seen her and that she was not a friend of Allen's.

Allen, 70, has never been charged with a crime and has never been convicted of any offense. He has been married to Mia Farrow since 1992 and has two children with her.

The woman's claims are the latest in a series of allegations against Allen. In 2002, a woman claimed that Allen had sexually abused her when she was 13 and he was 40. Allen denied the claim and the woman's lawsuit was dismissed.

In 2006, a woman claimed that Allen had sexually abused her when she was 15 and he was 42. Allen denied the claim and the woman's lawsuit was dismissed.

Nothing controversial in Super Bowl ads

By Michael Ochs

NEW YORK (AP) — Super Bowl ads are not controversial, according to a group of advertising executives who say they are simply reflecting the current state of the economy.

The group, which includes executives from several major advertising agencies, said they were surprised by the criticism of the ads. They said the ads are simply reflecting the current state of the economy and that they are not controversial.
