District looks at land for bond issue

"We have to be responsible and negotiate for the very best prices possible, because it isn't the district's money we're talking about. It's the taxpayers' money."

Congressional analysts say health care law means fewer on job

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional analysts say the health care law will mean fewer jobs in the private sector, but that the government will create new jobs to make up for the loss.

The Congressional Budget Office (CBO) says that the health care law will result in a net loss of 2.5 million jobs in the private sector over the next 10 years. However, the CBO also estimates that the government will create 2.5 million new jobs in the public sector over the same period.

The CBO's analysis is based on the assumption that the health care law will be fully implemented by 2019. It also assumes that the economy will continue to grow at a steady pace.
