NE Kansas residents feel crowded by oil producers

Residents in Northeast Kansas feel crowded by oil producers. The influx of drilling activity has led to concerns about environmental impacts and community disruption.

It says that the number of pilots who head to the wrong airports has increased significantly in recent years. This is due to a combination of factors, including fatigue and increasing traffic.

The FAA has implemented several measures to reduce these errors, including improved pilot training and enhanced airport signage. However, more work needs to be done to ensure the safety of our skies.
