By JENNIFER HANCOCK
LANSING — A Michigan college is offering a course in zombies and the apocalypse. The course is called "Zombie Apocalypse: A Survival Guide" and is being taught by Professor John Doe. The course will cover everything from how to survive a zombie attack to how to build a bunker. The course is open to all students and is a popular choice among those who are interested in the undead.

NE Kansas residents feel crowded by oil producers
By JENNIFER HANCOCK
WICHITA — Residents in northeastern Kansas are feeling crowded by oil producers. The area has become a hub for oil drilling and production, and many residents are complaining about the noise, traffic, and environmental impact. They feel that the oil industry is taking over their community and that they have no say in the matter.
