Commission to establish building safety board
 A new commission will be set up to study the safety of buildings in the city, a move that could lead to a new building safety board, according to a report from the city's housing department.

The report, which was released last week, says that the city's current building code is outdated and that there is a need for a new building safety board. The board would be responsible for reviewing and updating the city's building code, as well as for overseeing the city's building department.

Another delay in health law's employer mandate
 The U.S. Supreme Court has ruled that the employer mandate in the Affordable Care Act is unconstitutional. This means that employers with fewer than 50 employees will not be required to provide health insurance to their employees.

The court's decision is a major victory for employers and a setback for the Obama administration. The administration had argued that the employer mandate was a necessary part of the law's overall structure.
