There is a new runner to the Turpin School Board.

On Tuesday, challenger Pamela Bromlow received a 106 more than twice as many votes as incumbent Jeff Bowles in the only contested election in the board's race primaries.

The final tally unofficially according to the Seward County Election Office was 212 for Bromlow and Saunders' balloting was made possible by the voters themselves.

"Thank you to all who voted and to those who voted for me," she said. "I will listen all

BOWLING GREEN, Ky. — It was a sight to make a classic car lover weep. A gaping sinkhole opened up inside the National Corvette Museum early Wednesday and swallowed eight prized cars like they were toys, jolting them to a heap mixed from dirt and concrete.

It happened early Wednesday morning while the attraction dedicated to the classic American sports car was closed to the public.

"They're all just kind of mass thrown in the bottom of the hole," said Western Kentucky University spokesman Jason Patton, who was on the scene with the museum to assess the damage and stability of the surrounding area.

The sinkhole, which was created by the museum and two a 1993 ZR-1 Spider and a 2009 ZR1 Blue Devil — were on loan from General Motors, said museum spokesman Dave Hodgson.

The other cars damaged were a 1962 black Corvette, a 1984 PPG Pace Car, a 1992 White 1 Millionth Anniversary Edition, Ruby Red 40th Anniversary Corvette, a 2003 Audrey Hepburn 50th Corvette and a 2009 white 1.2 Millionth Corvette.

"All of them have a unique story behind them," said museum executive director Wendell Strode. "They're

Campaign ad distances vulnerable Dem from 'disastrous' ObamaCare rollout

• Herald Post

Just two years ago, Florida Democratic Rep. Joe Garcia was touting the benefits of the Affordable Care Act, which he called "the most significant health care reform" that would reduce health care costs and "help millions of Americans."

A Democratic Super PAC has launched an ad on Garcia's behalf touting him as a lawmaker who "fought for" the law and "stood up to the Republicans" to get the "American" rollout of the health law's website, and says he is working to "help fix" the law. But the Super PAC, Majority PAC, of also says Garcia supported legislation to let Americans keep the health plans they like.

Garcia is the latest in a growing list of vulnerable congressional Democrats who are distancing themselves from the Affordable Care Act in November.

In January, the House Majority PAC, a Super PAC that supports vulnerable Rep. Ann Kirkpatrick, from ObamaCare, saying the Democrat "has been working to fix the law, not bring it down," which is the health law's website.

Sen. Mary Landrieu, a Democrat facing re-election in deep red Louisiana, released an ad in late December in which she claims she is holding Obama's feet to the fire on the health law's website. Landrieu's Democratic Majority PAC, of also says Garcia supported legislation to let Americans keep the health plans they like.

The timing if and that's what we are hearing from Democrats is remember in fact, Landrieu took to CNN interviews featured in the ad. Garcia's campaign has also been relying on her name stakes this year than Republicans. One of the few Democrats to have endorsed her bid publicly in November was Georgia, whose incumbent GOP Rep. Tom Graves is voting.

The parties are on more even footing in the House, where both Republicans and Democrats have a plenty of competitive races.

Democrats have been optimistic, including most recently Rep. Joe Garcia, that ObamaCare will be a big issue for Republicans in 2014, claiming that the health care law is costing Democrats' campaigns
