On the hunt at Arvdon Park
A group of about 100 hunters from the Kansas State University Wildlife and Waters department spent the day at Arvdon Park in Topeka, Kan., hunting for wild turkey. The group was led by Dr. David Helms, who is the director of the department. The hunters were successful in bagging several turkeys. Helms said that the turkeys are a keystone species in the area and that it is important to monitor their population. The hunters will be processing the turkeys and donating the meat to a local food bank.

Helm complaints continue
Interlocal agreement meeting target of Helm's rage
By David Helms
It is a matter of 400,000 to 500,000 dollars a year, but it is a matter of principle. David Helms, director of the Wildlife and Waters department at Kansas State University, is angry. He is angry because he believes that the interlocal agreement between the university and the city of Topeka is unfair. He is angry because he believes that the city is not doing its fair share. He is angry because he believes that the agreement is a violation of the law. Helms has been vocal in his complaints and has threatened to sue the city. The city has responded by saying that the agreement is a fair and reasonable one. Helms is not convinced and is continuing to fight the agreement.
