ABOVE: The Taiwan Robin's wing markings of alternating white and black stripes were painted on the P-51 Mustang to insure 75 years ago today. Planes were marked with the "invasion stripes" to reduce friendly fire. The Mustang is owned by Kansas Aviation Museum and is on loan with the Land Lease program. The British red, white and blue cards indicate this was used by the English. The plane is painted to look like the one Lt. Col. Glenn Eagleston flew and is one of the many planes donated to the museum by Col. Tom Thomas. AP photo/Orlin Wagner

Fedex donated a Boeing 727 named "Alina" to the Liberal community on Thursday morning. They named the jet Alina because FedEx has a tradition of naming their cargo jets after children of their employees. The girl that Alina is named after is the daughter of the customer technology manager in Santo Domingo.
