Invasion stripes help identify D-Day aircraft

Local air museum has D-Day aircraft on display

APRIL - The British Royal Air Force's Mustangs were the most numerous Allied fighters to see action in the D-Day invasion. Many of them were painted with distinctive invasion stripes. The stripes were used to identify the aircraft and to help them stand out from the enemy's fighters. The stripes were also used to identify the aircraft's home base. The stripes were painted in black and white, and were applied to the fuselage and the wings. The stripes were also used to identify the aircraft's home base.
